Graded Hammer Standard (GHS) keyboards

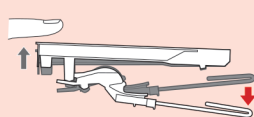

GHS keyboard provides the essential feature of an acoustic piano touch havier keys in lower section and lighter in the high. First time Graded Hammer was first introduced in 1966. Yamaha was the first manufacturer to create hammer action for digital piano with a graded feel.

When key is pressed

The hammer rises, providing a piano-like touch

When key is released

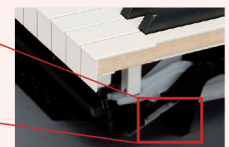

The weight of the hammer causes the key to return

Graded Hammer 3X (GH3X) keyboards

This keyboard has Yamaha's proprietary third sensor, the Damper Sensor. It enables the pianist to play the same note in rapid succession without cutting off the sound - double repetition effect. 5 different weight zones.

Each Key has three sensors.

Three sensors accurately sense the motion of keys

Choosing the Right number of Keys

Smaller keyboards can be easier to play and less-confusing—not to mention more portable and convenient—for new and younger players! Commonly, these smaller instruments will have either 76 or 61 keys. A keyboard with 61 keys will still allow a beginning piano student to complete most of the lessons they will initially encounter. Note that most classical and complex music does require a piano with the full 88 keys.

How to Choose a Guitar?

A guitar that is too large will make it difficult for your child to make the proper reach with both the right and left hands. Having their arm as high as their shoulder to reach over the guitar can become uncomfortable and at worst painful. Over reaching for the first fret puts them at a great technical disadvantage because their muscles are already stretched out making it difficult to properly move their fingers on the fingerboard. Generally, adults are comfortable with full size guitars.

UKULELES

The popularity of ukuleles shouldn't be surprising; with just four nylon strings they're easy to learn and play, and also easy on newbies' fingers, especially as compared to a steel-string acoustic guitar. We carry a wide selection of ukuleles from very affordable starter ukuleles to the highest-quality instruments built to meet the needs of professional musicians.
